"recognize definitely the organizations of the workers trade unions as the basis of representation, is a fatal omission." Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, declared today in a statement discussing the tentative report of the commission. "Certainly," Mr. Gompers added, "the conference should reconsider this point in order to make possible the confidence and co-operation of wage-earners "which can be expressed only through organizations of their own making."

Mr. Gompers said any plan to establish or maintain anything like fair relations between workers and employers must avoid compulsory features, declaring the mass of American workers were "American citizens and in that sovereign citizenship they are freemen." Proposals for compulsory labor are repugnant, he added.

In order to promote constructive and permanent changes that will eliminate causes of much industrial unrest, Mr. Gompers said, the conference should consider governmental agencies to provide the necessary information and assistance in obtaining continuous betterment of working conditions. This problem, he added, must ultimately be worked out by employers and employes, with the advice and assistance of the government. was the most effective hurler in the American league during the 1919 season in the matter of preventing opposing batsmen from scoring runs off his delivery.

The official pitching averages for the American league, made public today, show that Johnson allowed an average of only 1.49 runs per nine innings pitched. The Washington star worked in thirty-nine games, pitched 290 innings and faced 1,073 batsmen, allowing 235 hitz and only batsmen, allowing 235 hit: and only 73 runs all season. Of the total runs scored off him but 48 were earned by the opposition. Johnson was also the leading strike-out pitcher for 1919, whiffing 147 batters.

The Cuban government already has adonted risorous measures to prevent Williams, of Chicago, hit the most batsmen, sending eleven to first base. Shaw, of Washington, had the most wild pitches, being credited with ten. Howard Ehmke, of the Tigers, gave opposing batters 107 bases on balls.

The famous left shift of his dad's was apparently missing from his repertoire, however. His defense was good—so good, in fact, that his opponent failed to land a clean blow during the eight rounds. Fitz knows a great deal about the game. The old champion was always anxious for his boy to enter the ring, and coached him for years with that object in mind. Old Fitz used to say:

Did you ever loo kat the rows of shoe in a trolley car and see how much of the owner's individuality they are expressing? Of course, the familiar adage is: "Look up and not down." but one can ignore that occasionally.

First, there's position. Some are turned on the sides, some turn in, some twist about each other until you are lost in a sort of horrible fascination in lost in a sort of horrible fascination in deciding which is right and which left. Once in a while you see a stork effect—only one shoe in sight—while the other is curled under in some mysterious way.
